TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 2, 1858. Cuyahoga County Court House

Six months before the 19th of October, the corner one of the above massive building was laid, and uring the intervening time the work has been rapidly pushed forward until the walls have now sched a hight of about 60 feet. The contracto a are Messrs. Smith & Pannell, and the architect. J J. Husband. The building is 80 feet on the Square by 100 deep, and 70 feet high. The foundation for the walls is laid 7 feet thick and three feet high; above this are the basement walls, 3 feet 10 inches thick and 10 feet high. Upon this firm foundation inches thick throughout. The walls are of stone feet. The building is built most thoroughly fire

Entering the main door apon the first floor, we pass into a large half, running through the building and 13 feet wide. On the left of this, and looking out upon the Square is the Recorder's office, 30 feet square and 15 feet high. Opposite this is one of like dimensions for the Auditor's office. From these large rooms ante-rooms open for private purposes. On the North cast and North west corner are rooms for Probate Judge and Treasurer 36 feet square, with ante-rooms. In the center of this floor is an open rotanda which will be open up to the sky light. On either side of this will be stair ways to pass into the upper part of the building. Upon the second floor, we find in the two cor aers at the right and left the Sheriff's and County Clerk's offices, each 10 fect square and 16 feet high, In the rear of these are two Court rooms 45 by 27 each. Back of these are water closets and small private rooms. Passing to the third floor we find a hall through the front of the building, on either side of which are the Law Library room and the Judges rooms. Beside these, there are other rooms for Juries. We then come to the Court Room proper, which is 45 by 74 feet, and 23 feet high -FLOUR. -300 barrels Fredericks-this will be a large and elegant room, and well fit-ted for its purpose. ALARIC. Not far from the city of Syracuse, when it was the metropolis of all Sicily, an object of longing to ambitious conquerors, and one of the finest cit-ies in the world; not far from this place, upon the the upper walls of the building are built, which are 2 feet 4 inches thick, while the inside walls are 16 not over five and twenty-tall and well propoinches thick throughout. The walls are of stone gioned; with a muscular system finely developed; from Amberst, Lorain county, and of this stone and possessing a face not only striking in its some 2,200 tons has been so far furnished for the manly beauty, but remarkable, in one so young, building. There are some beautiful blacks of this for its stern, resolute, and self-reliant expression.

Its dress was light and simple, and evidently of greek manufacture, the lower limbs being clothed in close-fitting goat skin, above which he were proof, the columns, beams, girders, shutters and a shirt of white linen, confined at the waist by stairways being of iron and all the walls brick and belt of fine mail. Upon his head was a cap stone. There are 32 of these iron columns extend-ing from foundation to roof. These rest apon two large blocks of stone a foot thick, the lower one mail. He stood for a while gazing about, as though undecided what course he should pursue; but finally he espied an old fisherman, not fer off, who had just some down upon the beach, and towards him he made his way.
"A bright, pleasant morning, good sir," suid

The old man cast his not from his shoulders and gazed up. He carefully scanned the features be-fore him, and then replied: "Aye, fair sir, It is a pleasant morning. We have many such on this coast."

"And yet it storms sometimes, I suppose," suggotted the first speaker.

"He is a wise man who little hoods the storms he cannot quell," said the fisherman with a ned of the head which seemed to give his words more meaning than the circumstances under which they were spoken would imply.

"You are right there," responded the other."But tell me-where can I find Artabans, the The fisherman took another careful look into his terlocutur's face, and then answered : "He lives upon youder mountain, which is calld Catalano. Do you wish to see him?"

Then follow the path that leads to yonder cot until it brings you to a small stream. Cross that, and then upon your right hand you will see a beaten track. He lives in a cave near the top of the mountain, and this track will lead you directly thither."

The young man thanked his informant, and ras upon the point of turning away, when the mean no offense. Your face looks familiar It had the cast of a countenance I fancied I had

"You may warn me of danger, if you will, but do not seek to place the barrier of fear between me and my desire, for I know not the emotion.— You, Artabanus, taught me when I was a boy, and your wise lessons have not departed from my mind. Artabanus started to his feet and grasped the youth by the hand.
"Notice Alaric," he cried, with a joyful enthusiasm, "thou art worthy of the maiden's hand.—She does love thee—she cherishes thy memory within her heart as the most precious thing of earth, and for long years she has lived upon the book that thou wouldst solve to her.

You were then seventeen, and from seventeen to five-noble the purpose of th were then seventeen, and from seventeen to five-and-twenty, especially in one so carly developed as you were, there is not much change. You were as you were, there is not nuce change. Too were a man then, and you are no more new. So you must expect that you will be known and recognized. But let us speak of that hereafter. First do you see lanthe, and when you have found all right in that quarter, we will consider further."

"I shall find her with her father?"

"Yes—and his house is just where it was eight years are."

"I will go and seek her, then, and ——"
"Hold, my son. You had better wait till "Hol?" my son. You had better was a mightfall ere you enter the city, and also exmightfall ere you enter the city, and also exwithin the sacred repository of ner and a litchange that Greek shirt for a garment less likethey had assumed more of manhood—but the tie—they had assumed more of manhood—but ly to attract attention, for I assure you that too much care cannot be taken."

Alaric was impatient to see lanthe, but he was willing to wait. So he sat down by his old teacher's side again—sat as he had sat years before, when receiving instruction from the same lips—and intened to the story of the wrongs that had been done in Sicily during the last eight years. Hour after hour passed away, and Artabanus had still more to tell of the ty-rant's cruelty.

"Merciful heavens!" cried the youth, fired almost to phrenzy by the recital, "how have the people borne all this?" "They have borne it under fear of their lives. Pyrrho's soldiers are posted at every place where a murmur can arise.

"And how-long shall it last!"

"Till some spirit with a heart to love Sicily more than life; and a soul that fears not the tyrant, shall arise in Syracuse !" pronounced the old man solemnly.

Alaric started as he met the glance of his aghimself to speak then, for the feelings that had anno liftin sprung to life in his own seul were so wild and of his love ge that they fairly startled him. He arose and walked out upon the mountain, and ever the lovers were left alone. They told over the and anon, as his eye rested upon the distant city, tales of affection they used to fell in other years, and amon, as his eye rested upon the distant city, the sof affection they used to tell in other years, the tunult in his soul came to startle him again. the He did not seek to analyze the emotion, for it was so bold and gigantic, so geni-like in its misty proportions, that he dared not hundle it After awhile Artabanus came out and touch-

"Alaric," spoke the old man, "it is waxing late, and we may be on the move. Let us eat a crust of brend, and then we will descend the intain together. I must go with you as far as the fisherman's cot, for there we must find a more fitting garb for you. Glycon is my friend, and may be trusted to the verge of the grave."

The frugal supper was soon dispatched, and then the two descended the mountain together. At the fisherman's cot they stopped, and found that Glycon had just returned home from his day's labor. Artahanus took him apart, and having explained to him as much of Alaric's sto-ry as he deemed advisable, he asked for some garments that would answer for the youth to

The fisherman led the way to his scanty wardrabe, and the necessary garments were soon selected. Alaric's leggins of goat-skin were replaced by long hose of blue cloth, and his white linen shirt was exchanged for a dark brown frock, beneath which he could easily conceal his short sword. After this the hermit bay and there stopped.

"We had better not be seen together beyond this point," said the old man. "From here the way is plain, and you have had caution enough. At the gate you will not be stopped, unless some of the guard should take the whim to question you. Be wise, now, and cautious, and let me

"I will not forget." "Then may the gods guide and protect you." With this Artabanus turned back towards the mountain, and Alaric kept on. The shades of night were gathering over the city as the youth passed in at the broad gateway, and the guard had aircraft lighted their torches. He had gone a few steps when a rough voice commanded him to stop.

"Didn't you promise me a fish for my dinner, thou lying knave!" the voice continued "You have mistaken your man," said Alarie, hiding his face as much as possible without seeming desirons so to do. "Good Bacchus, so I have. Thou'rt not Mes
